

men, and a sliding down towards the foot of the bed, the pulse for some time full, and hard, then small and quick, and the whole powers of the system seemed to be fast or haunting, as a dernier and it seemed a hopeless case, a large blister was applied directly over the epigastric region, at about three o'clock P. M.; and to my entire astonishment I heard next morning, that the patient was sitting at the breakfast table. From that time he speedily recovered, and in a few days he was restored to health. In all cases of delirium, it was found that the happiest consequences, resulting from the application of a blister
