

with large quantities in some cases to to 20 drops. any of the acids in this class of medicines will answer the end better than must be desired in the administration of such articles owing to their tendency to form concretions in the lungs. they should be given in small quantities sufficient to answer our purpose

Having recourse to the same article in the same manner as in the case of the preceding medicines see that it is necessary to be cautious in the use of acids, and as the best remedy in cases of the kind is often a combination of the different remedies in the of our disease in the lungs one of which may be taken each with a few excellent tonic virtues

A cold infusion of the bark of the wild cherry (Prunus virginiana) is an article which perhaps has never been justly appreciated. As the best of this disease is a very peculiar one of the best tonics with which we are acquainted with. not only possessing tonic virtues in an eminent degree but ~~now~~ acts the part of a sedative most happily. The inferior bark should be procured. and just a sufficient quantity of it placed in a pitcher of cold water. as to make pleasant bitter. of this the individual may drink as much as he pleases. not using it so freely as to produce nausea. or any unpleasant symptoms. continued as long as indicated.
