City to receive 2nd Museum Hotel

A Lexington landmark is being turned into an upscale hotel.

Kyle S. Smith, a local developer, and Tyler Christopher, a New York City developer, have plans to convert the former Litchfield Hotel, which was built in 1925, into a 21st-century hotel.

The hotel will be the fourth in the 21C group of hotels, which are currently under construction in downtown Lexington and cover the city’s downtown.

Plans call for the hotel to be operational by 2023 with additional office space being added to a restaurant, a bar, meeting rooms and a ballroom.

Former President Clinton heading to Kentucky

Former President Bill Clinton will be in this state next month as a keynote speaker during an Earth Day event at the University of Kentucky.

Top Environmental Student Government Council spoke to the Student Government Board at the University of Kentucky. The city was expected to host more than 3,000 people and 150 events.

The council includes students from across the country’s private and public high schools. A Glass of Milk is another event, Business, which is an annual meeting, is a big idea, the area’s largest annual meeting.

The appearance is not open to the public.

Appeals court reinstates Derby ticket lawsuit

A lawsuit that alleges a former University of Kentucky basketball coach kicked and spat at a man at the Kentucky Derby has been reinstated by the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

The lawsuit was filed on behalf of Joe D. Miller, who was one of the many fans at the event.

The lawsuit claims Miller was attacked by Mike Breykman, co-owner of the Kentucky Derby.
