Cruelty goes into making of cosmetics

Companies cave in to China

It’s 2012 — no company should be testing its products by dropping chemicals into the eyes of cats or tainting the bare skin of rabbits. It’s time for China, the United States, and other countries to stop all animal tests in their cosmetics and chemical testing policies. And it’s time for all cosmetics companies to heed their customers’ demands for cruelty-free products.

Kristine Leffler is the scientific and policy analyst with the Humane Society’s People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA). You can send her your story ideas here.