

river. Morgan then started again on his march, still having the purpose of crossing the river, and at no time during his succeeding movements was he more than a few miles from the stream, being finally compelled, as noted, by the fact that his men and horses were worn out and unable to go further, to surrender near this city.

COMPLETE ACCOUNT

OF THE

JOHN MORGAN RAID

THROUGH

KENTUCKY, INDIANA AND OHIO,

IN JULY, 1863.

PUBLISHED BY
FLORA E. SIMMONS.
1863.