"GETTING BY"

What percentage of students come to college to learn? Although such statistics would be difficult to compile, nevertheless, the average student body of any college contains a large number of those who are just "getting by."

There seems to be a great tendency on the part of most undergraduates to ridicule the student who is in college for the purpose of receiving a thorough education. That such a tendency is prevalent can easily be seen in the classroom, fraternity, sorority, dormitory, or other student group.

The student who really studies is often the object of scorn and disdain. He is pointed out as a goody-goody student. In the classroom the best example of student laziness is found. If the professor does not arrive on time there is much uneasiness on the part of many of the students. They can hardly wait until the required time is up so they will not have to attend that particular class.

The student who comes to the university with limited means and a desire to learn often finds he is a "back number." If he does not accept the principle of the student who is just "getting by" he will soon find he is unpopular.

Students who are laughed at now may get the laugh on their classmates later in life. The learning one gets at college is not all taken from textbooks but the habits of application and diligence which he builds up through their use will no doubt be useful to him in his life work.

The student who is "getting by" will find that his bluff will be harder to make in the years following his graduation.—Ohio State Lantern.

A COLLEGE EDUCATION

In the June issue of the American magazine is an article written by a graduating senior from Bowdoin College. It is entitled "Where do I go from here" and in it the author laments the fact that a liberal arts education does not develop a man for any particular type of work. "What have I to offer my employer," he says. "The answer is easy. Nothing. On the other hand a graduate of a technical school can go to a prospective employer and say he is trained in a particular type of work. If the employer needs such a man he receives the job."

The author of the above mentioned article is right in some respects and wrong in others. A technical man has the advantage in securing a position immediately upon graduation, but whether he will hold that advantage depends, not so much upon his education, as upon himself. It is the opinion of many business men that education really begins upon graduation from college. What a man learns in college, be it liberal arts or technical work, may or may not be of use to him in the business world. If he has received nothing from college except a knowledge of Latin and Greek, formulas and integrals, he has done himself an injustice.

The most important part of a college education is social development. A knowledge of textbooks is necessary, but the study of human nature is quite essential. Meeting people, making contacts with all types of individuals, being able to humor some and tolerate others—that is an education.—Carnegie Tartan.

FOUNDATIONS

Since the last Summer Session the new library has made a seemingly slow but firm beginning, and now that the foundations have been completed, work is progressing rapidly. Perhaps there is a lesson to be found by watching the careful, exacting work as it has been going on all during the last year.

Impatience is a well known fault of the modern generation. There is a tendency to rush things, to leave incomplete the basic work, that the ornamentation may be reached more quickly. Painstaking work may not have any glamour, but it is an accomplishment upon which a building, a task or a life may rest secure.

So perfect, so strong, make your foundations that there will be no fear of crumbling when age comes and the test is applied. Notice the worker whose job is faultless, not only to outward appearances, but within.

Learn your lesson from the library which will soon house thousands of books, reams of work and knowledge—firm foundations!

SUMMER SPORTS

One of the crying needs of the Summer Session at the University has been interests outside the classrooms. There has been, heretofore, a feeling prevalent that summer school was a grind, and one sneaked off to go swimming with a guilty conscience arising from the idea that one should spend all his time studying while taking classes in the usual vacation period.

Therefore, the new series of summer sports with an exciting tournament to cap the climax, comes as pleasant news to many of the students attending the Summer Session. Open to men and women, students and faculty, the variety of games offers no restrictions to anyone connected with the University.

The Kernel believes that this addition to the features of the 1930 Summer Session will prove of benefit to all, and wishes to congratulate the responsible persons for their happy solution of lightening the grind of continual study in hot weather. All work and no play—

Take a dose of pleasant recreation and enter at least one of your favorite sports!

Northeastern University, with the Fore Paw society, is one of the most recent to form a club of the SuKy society type whose main purpose is to foster good will to visiting athletic teams on the campus.

DON'T RUSH

For a month or more the "Purple" has carried observations of men of the professional world regarding that problem which is uppermost in the minds of graduating collegians: the choice of life work. Whatever has been said, it is worthy of note that a profession is not hereditary. Fathers may set brilliant and inspiring examples for their sons but it is a frailty of ambitious youth to follow blindly the footsteps of the father, having been enchanted by the magic of public recognition.

The College of Liberal Arts lends itself to the solution of the perplexing problem of profession and, in the course of four years, salvages much from misdirected ambitions, hair-trigger decisions, and the mad-rush tactics of university students who are anxious and eager to get into the national pastime of money-making. There is in the atmosphere of the college much that suggests to the student that he take the time to see the whole of life and urges him to avail himself of the steady influence of four years of study.

The two-year pre-anything course is an uncertain economizer of time and there have been those who missed the mark as a result, having failed to qualify with the fortunate few whose professional tendencies and convictions have capitalized upon the two-year preparation. It is, on the other hand, within the reach of the majority of students, who are inclined toward college, to benefit by the four years which terminate in the B. S. or B. A. degree. The broadening influences of such a college course have afforded rock bottom for groping feet and the professions reap the reward of having in their ranks one who has chosen his field after careful deliberation and has satisfied himself that he is right. The college has given him an open field in which he may locate his goal. It has gone further in providing him with the landmarks of those who have gone before in the same quest. It has allowed him the use of instruments which make navigation easy and, in the end, has endowed him with a sense of security that is priceless.

With this incentive the profession will have an appeal to the student similar to that of religion. It is then that he will be impatient with that which is not his best effort. Discouragements, instead of forcing doubts into his mind concerning the wisdom of his choice, will serve as stepping-stones toward a worthwhile achievement. Every day he will feel the pleasure of successful accomplishment and progress promoted by a sound background and not undermined by fear. The satisfaction which he knew in his college days from a well-placed drive down the side-lines, a long spiraling punt in a critical moment, or a perfect pitch to the pin will be lived again by him in a different world but by reason of the same principle of sound fundamentals. His unflinching step will be a witness to the value of his junior and senior years in the College of Liberal Arts and he will take his degree as a man from whom the world may expect a contribution of worth.

The last two years of the Liberal Arts course are revealing. Embryonic theories, whether personal or otherwise, are proved or disproved according to their virtues and faults. To the students of the natural sciences there dawns a relation to the mysteries of this existence which enhance the value of the outlook. This alone is worth the sacrifice.—Sewanee Purple.

DEAN ANDERSON ATTENDING MEETING OF ENGINEERS

Dean F. Paul Anderson, of the Engineering College, is attending the international meeting of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, held in Minneapolis, Minn., this week. He was toastmaster at the annual banquet at the Curtis hotel there last night. Many graduates of the University have become outstanding authorities in the field of heating and ventilating.

COURTS ARE CONSTRUCTED
Two tennis courts are being made ready for use between Euclid avenue and Boyd hall. They are intended for games between co-ed players, and are not for public use. The construction of additional courts in back of McVey hall last spring has greatly relieved congestion among the tennis fans.
