

and varied activities, the challenge of community leadership, and the satisfaction of service to others as well as the security of an expanding profession.

The Department of Social Work is a member of the Division of Schools and Departments of the national Council on Social Work Education. Its curriculum, based upon the national standards in the field, leads to a degree of Bachelor of Arts with a major in Social Work. Students, upon its completion, are encouraged to continue their technical preparation in graduate professional schools of social work. However, our graduates are currently holding responsible positions in the public social services, group work activities, and in other social agencies at the junior professional level for which they are qualified. Students majoring in social work are guided in the selection of courses giving a broad liberal arts background, an understanding of human behavior, and the social, economic, and political forces shaping our society.

Courses in the Department cover the organization, operation, and history of public and private welfare services, including the developing Social Security program. Principles of relief and rehabilitation in family and children's work and the growing range of group work and leisure time activities are studied, as well as community organization and research in social work. Personal experience with agency programs in the field is planned for each student.

Early consultation with department members is urged for students considering a major in this field. Students from other departments are eligible to take many of the courses offered, SW 24, 122, and 130a are especially recommended for all students interested in social welfare.

SOCIOLOGY

The Sociology Department conducts a program of training and research, complementary to that of other social sciences, focused upon the central problems of group organization, social action, and public policy. Basic courses in the fundamentals of social behavior are supplemented by specialized courses in research and analysis. Internships in important public agencies provide additional research experience and a chance to apply sociological principles under supervision.

In the Sociology Department the Bureau of Community Service makes the tools and skills of social science available to Kentucky communities and organizations. Training in Sociology leads to scientific research, Social Science Analyst positions with the Federal or State governments, and positions in human relations with private agencies. Since every effort is made to guide students toward a broad training in the field of the social sciences, an undergraduate major in sociology proves valuable for those entering such professional fields as family relations, industrial relations, law, social service, and the like.

ZOOLOGY

Courses given in this Department are designed to offer the general student opportunity to obtain a cultural background in this field of biology and to give the student interested in this field as a livelihood the proper basic principles and training.

Students interested in careers in medicine, medical technology, wild life management, conservation, governmental work, research, teaching at the elementary, high school, and college level, as well as in many other areas, will find Zoology courses which offer them the necessary training.